The Simple Life. A man is simple when his chief care is the wish to be what he ought to be; that is, honestly and naturally human. We may compare existence to raw material. What it is, matters less than what is made of it; as the value of a work of art lies in the flowering of a workman's skill. True life is possible in social conditions the most diverse, and with natural gifts the most unequal. It is not fortune, or personal advantage, but our turning them to account, that constitutes the value of life. Fame adds no more than does length of days; quality is the thing.-Charles Wagner.

"'No, Ehr." "T'm sorry,' said the rich man. 'If you had a purse, I should have given you a dime to put in it.'

"This man was scheduled to speak again at the school the next month, and when he came the boys were prepared for him. An empty purse lay hid in every pair of trousers.

"And sure enough, at the end of the speech, the man called another boy and said: "'Have you a purse, my son?'

"'Yes, sir,' was the eager answer. "'I'm glad of it," said the other. 'If you hadn't, I should have given you a dime to buy one with." -- San An-

There was a period considerably later than the stone age, when this interesting but rare creature was to be observed, feeding quite tamely, at literary and political breakfasts. Later on, he was still to be enticed by fair hands to lunch parties, and was sometimes found hovering near the teatable of some beautiful and expert tamer between five and seven.

But with the new century this rare creature's habits have altered most completely, for he is seldom to be caught before eight p. m. on week days, and has a habit, moreover, of retiring to remote haunts and obscure thick is from Friday night till Monday afternoon.

A Sure Cure.

F. Marion Crawford, at a dinner in New York, attacked spiritualism. "In principle it may be true," Mr. Crawford said, "but spiritualism as it is practiced to-day is a thing to beware of. I know a man whose wife suddenly developed a great interest in spiritualism. She attended seance after seance at the house of a handsome medium with cark, thick hair and moldering eyes.

"Her husband cured her, though. He took to accompanying her to the memost passionate and tender messages from his first wife."
